Second Prize, Oil Painting

FOREWORD

For the twentieth time, the Kansas City Art Institute presents the Midwestern Artists' Exhibition. In all these years, the Art Institute has endeavored to accept the responsibility for encouraging art in its varied techniques and to discharge that responsibility to the best advantage for the artists.

In order to carry on this function in the most satisfactory manner possible, the Art Institute is taking a step which should further improve the scope, quality and benefits of the Midwestern. Next year, conditions remaining as they are, the Art Institute will continue to administer and sponsor the Midwestern, but the Nelson-Atkins Gallery will provide the galleries for the exhibition. This gracious cooperation on the part of the Gallery, which is one of the most outstanding institutions of its kind in the country, makes possible superior conditions of presentation. In keeping with this move, the prizes offered by the Art Institute will be substantially increased.

To return to this year's Midwestern, the Kansas City Art Institute expresses its appreciation for the splendid cooperation of the jury: Lawrence Adams of the University of Missouri, Raymond Eastwood of the University of Kansas, and Fletcher Martin of the University of Iowa. All three have contributed invited paintings in addition to their excellent jury service.

THE KANSAS CITY ART INSTITUTE

- For 53 years the Kansas City Art Institute has maintained leadership in art education. The constantly improving staff of instructors and growing cooperation with other educational institutions and especially with the Nelson-Atkins Gallery reaffirm this leadership in offering to students the best in art education in this Midwestern area.
- It is now possible to acquire the B. A. degree in Art covering work at the Art Institute through a Combined Course with several colleges including Park College, the College of St. Teresa and the University of Kansas City. Special arrangements must be made with the colleges and the Art Institute.
- The Art Institute is further expanding its service to the academic community in granting a Master of Arts in art to qualified students. Additions to the lecture staff of the Art Institute will include Paul Gardner, Director of the Nelson-Atkins Gallery, and Laurence Sickman, Curator of Oriental Art for the Nelson-Atkins Gallery. Ritchie Cooper, noted illustrator, will join the Illustration Department.
- Closer integration with the community in business contacts and cooperation and in the services of fine arts constantly increase the opportunities for the students of the Art Institute.
- The success of the exhibition of Thomas Hart Benton's painting students in New York (to be an annual event invited by the Associated American Artists Gallery) is attested in the favorable critical reaction and the fact that more than half of the works exhibited were sold to Eastern collectors.
